But is it correct? Is it appropriate that one has to purchase a certain apparatus to assist the free flow of 'chi' for the benefits of all?

If the subject is presented to those who create a living by get rid of these apparatus to those who are to a great extent in need of support, the answer will definitely be a loud and clear 'yes.'

But the fact of the matter is: "It all depends."

For example, a lot of inside water fountains have been sold in recent times to those who believe that by putting these indoor water fountains in a selected position, they will help bring forth prosperity.

As a qualified feng shui practitioner for over 25 years, I can bear out that this idea is of much validity, and that when situated properly - that is, sited to the right track - these indoor water fountains can help aid the increase of income to a large extent. Sounds too amazing, doesn't it?

However it is true that when the 'water' part among the 'five parts' in the Chinese philosophy is well sited, it will be able to stir up more 'water' chi which will result in bringing forth more prosperity. That's why all along Chinese history, water has been confacered as the symbol of money.

Hence the fondness of these water fountains all through times past by the architects who might have subconsciously tuned into the charisma of employing them to produce forth richness.

On the other hand, not all feng shui apparatus are produced equal. There is more propaganda than precision when it comes to hanging a flute onto the face of the beam on the ceiling to ward off the downward pressure of the beam itself. This unsound belief has been made up by those who only want to push more flutes to begin with! And it doesn't have anything to do with off-setting the so-called 'negative influences' from the beam itself either. Nevertheless, the flutes have been sold by the truckloads in these recent years.

The same is true of the principle that the diagonal corner from the entrance is considered the 'money corner' and thus it is in no way to be opened as a window, lest the good money 'chi' will run away. This is an additional typical abuse of imaginative thinking applied onto the feng shui philosophy. If this conception were valid, then all those well designed houses would end up leading their owners onto the road of hardship!

A small education is unsafe - this is valid in many facets of life.

Feng shui is the only system in the world that enables individuals who are in the know to have very profound insights about the surroundings as well as those who dwell in it. It is a very authoritative system for analyzing the well-being of the residents at all levels. When used in the approved manner, it can be a fine means to trace back what happened in days gone by, as well as forecast what will take place in the future. It is the most surprising system that is beyond anyone's thoughts.

With the right feng shui tool, yes, one's well being can certainly be enhanced to a great extent - it's just a matter of whether or not the right thing is done at the right time in the right situation!
